COUNTY AGENTS' COLUMN

About the Farm

Many cellars are too dry during much of the year to keep eggs well. They should be sprinkled lightly once a day. Keep eggs below 68 degrees and where there is considerable moisture. Gather them two or three times daily, and cool them before placing them in the case.

Advances in feed without corresponding increases in prices of dairy products make the dairyman's problems more difficult. It means that all details of feeding, management and care of the herd must be carefully studied and every effort made to produce milk and butterfat at a low cost.

The most productive runners on strawberries are formed in August. A little detailed hoe work will assist in forming a well balanced row of runner plants. Simply cut the new runners in the direction of the open spaces between plants and cover the tips with a little soil. This will cause them to take root at once and produce vigorous and fruitful plants.

An important factor in having a dry basement is keeping water away from the foundation wall, which means that rain water from the roof of the house should be conducted away. Downspouts should be connected to a sewer pipe, with cemented joints, leading to a convenient outlet. Earth should also be piled around the house to run the water away.

Sowing grass seed with alfalfa seed helps to prevent soil erosion and leaching. Where bluegrass grows it is recommended that three pounds of bluegrass seed to the acre be added to the regular seeding of alfalfa, which is usually about 12 pounds. Orchard grass or redtop is often sowed with alfalfa outside the bluegrass region.

Added Fair Features

The Future Farmers of Fayette county, the American Legion, Boy Scouts and Lexington Chamber of Commerce are co-operating with the Fayette county 4-H club leaders' council in the annual 4-H club district fair at Lexington August 23-24.

The Future Farmers will have a division of their own, while the Man O'War Post of the American Legion will have charge of the recreational activities, and the Boy Scouts give demonstrations of their activities.

Ten thousand 4-H club boys and girls in 40 central counties have been invited to make the fair one of the best of its kind in the United States. The departments include swine, dairy cattle, beef cattle, sheep, poultry, garden products, girls' room, foods, canning and clothing.

Farm Flock Class

In order to provide a class for flock owners who are not professional showmen, the farm flock class has been added to the poultry show at the Kentucky state fair this year. Pens containing four females and a male may be entered.

In addition to cash prizes, the Kentucky Poultry Improvement association will give a silver cup to the owner of the best pen, according to E. A. Baute, field manager for the association and assistant superintendent of the poultry show.

A. J. McFadden, superintendent of the poultry farm at the agricultural experiment station at Lexington, will be the judge.

Canning Tomato Juice

Plan to can some tomato juice to use as an appetizer at the beginning of the meal, as a beverage for breakfast or in soups or congealed salad, suggests Miss Florence Imalz, extension specialist in nutrition for the college of agriculture, university of Kentucky. Select well-ripened, firm tomatoes and make the juice as quickly as possible after tomatoes are picked. Green parts of tomatoes are likely to cause the juice to be bitter and decayed spots to cause spoilage. Wash tomatoes, remove the core and stem end and cut into small pieces. Cook to simmering point or about 170 to 180 degrees and strain immediately through a fine mesh sieve. Pour the juice into hot sterilized jars. Add a teaspoon of salt per quart of juice, unless it is to be used for infants, when salt should be omitted. Completely seal and process for 20 minutes in boiling water. Store in a cool, dark place.

Avoid boiling or allowing the cooked tomatoes to stand before processing to help protect the vitamin C content.

Tomato Aspic Salad.—Use 4 table-spoons of gelatin, ½ of a cup of cold water, 3 cups of strained tomato juice, ½ of a bay leaf, 2 whole cloves, 1 teaspoon of salt, 1 teaspoon of sugar, ½ of a teaspoon of paprika, 2 slices of onion, 1 cup of celery cut in small pieces, ¾ of a cup of diced cooked or raw carrots, 3 tablespoons of pimiento, and mayonnaise dressing. Soak the gelatin in cold water 5 minutes. Cook tomatoes, bay leaf, cloves, salt, sugar and onion together for 10 minutes. Strain, measure, add gelatin and mix thoroughly. Cool, and when consistency of thick syrup add the other ingredients. Turn into a mold, or individual molds, which have been dipped in cold water. Chill. Remove from mold. Serve on a bed of crisp lettuce leaves with mayonnaise dressing.

BOB JONES COMMENTS

The wise man always makes preparation for the inevitable.

Death is the inevitable. The Bible says Jesus Christ is the preparation for the inevitable. "He that hath the Son hath life," so says the Word.

I wouldn't rob the human heart of any of its joy nor would I cast a shadow over the clear sky of human hope, but it is worth while for us to sit down occasionally and face the fact that we are not in this world to stay for ever.

The years go by like mileposts on a railroad. It is Christmas! New Year! Easter! Thanksgiving! and Christmas again!

I have traveled in about twenty-five foreign lands. I have seen a funeral in every country. An Egyptian historian told me that in all probability during a certain period of Egyptian history, there were more than a hundred million Egyptian bodies embalmed. I cannot vouch for the accuracy of this statement. But I do know that of all the teeming millions who have lived in the past, that all, with the exception of two (Enoch and Elijah) went to eternity by the way of death. Jesus Christ, God's son, died. We are following all these millions to the grave. We don't know how soon we shall go. The best preparation that any man makes to live in this world is to make preparation to die. The man who is prepared to die and meet God any moment is a mighty fine citizen to have in a community.

In one of the missions in New York they handed me a card. It said, "If I were to die tonight I would go to . . ."

At the bottom of the card were these words, "Please fill in the name of the place." The Bible states explicitly that there are two places beyond this world—there is a heaven and there is a hell. I am a very practical sort of man. I want to know where I am going. I am willing to take chances with my money, with my health, and with my life, but I don't want to take any with my immortal soul.

GRATEFUL FOR FAVORS

To the voters of Morgan county:

As the primary is over and the count completed, and after being defeated by my opponent, J. D. Lykins, for circuit court clerk, by seven votes, I want to thank my many friends for their loyal support during this campaign, and I want to say to those who voted against me and to those who deceived me that I have no ill feeling toward any of them.

Any time that I can be of any service to anyone do not hesitate to call on me. You will find me ready to help you.

I also want to thank my opponents, especially J. D. Lykins and wife, for their attitude thru this campaign, and will say to them that they can feel assured of my support in the general election.

Thank you all.

I am your friend as before,

H. C. FRANKLIN

Two Kinds of Frogs' Legs

There are two kinds of frogs' legs, it seems: the wild and the cultivated. The wild frogs are little duffers. It may take anywhere from 12 to 24 pairs of the legs of these wild ones to make a pound. Although the flavor is said to be quite elegant, if somewhat gamey, it is easy to see that a man would have to work hard to make a meal out of such tiny slivers of meat. As served in hotels and clubs, there would be 15 to 18 of these legs to make an order.

The "Potato Bug Bird" A gamely feathered bird is the rose breasted grosbeak. Seen in the grass, it appears to be a dark and clumsy bird with an unwieldy looking beak. In flight it is seen to have a vivid rose-carmine breast and flush under its wings. Its song is a rich, full whistling carol, generally preceded by a sharp chirp. In some states farmers have christened it the "potato bug bird" since it is especially fond of the bug and its larvae.

Women on U. of V. Faculty

Prior to 1872 women were barred from the university even as students. Yet the university graduated the first Phi Beta Kappa woman in the United States.

Our Government — How It Operates

By William Bruckart

OUR POSTAL SERVICE

IT IS possible that you felt you had some complaint to make last July when you had to place a three-cent stamp on your letters instead of the red two-cent that sufficed prior to that time, but I will wager you did not make much noise about it after all. I think that I can tell you the reasons why you complained so little about that increase of one-third in the postal rates: there is nothing that gives you so much for so little as does the postal service.

Had the landlord increased your rent by a third, you would have moved right out; had the grocer raised any price that much, you would have gone immediately to his competitor, and had you been told by your bank that the interest rate you were paying was to be raised 33 1/3 per cent, you would have sworn vengeance.

I have wondered since that rate increase went into effect whether possibly it was not a good thing from the standpoint of patrons of the postal service as well as assuring to the federal government something near the amount of funds it has to have to pay operating expenses. The fact that there was an increase in rates, especially on letters, brought to the attention of all of us the benefits we had been enjoying through years and years of that service which we accept as a matter of course.

It costs between $600,000,000 and $700,000,000 to operate that farflung system known as the postal service each 12 months. The principle was inculcated in our governmental structure when the nation was formed that this service should be self-sustaining, though it is run by the federal government. It never has been quite able to pay its own way, but at the same time it never has been much of a charge on the government itself.

The reason postal rates never have quite succeeded in producing sufficient revenue to pay all expenses of the great organization that serves, is that fundamental belief that it should not be an agency for profit. In other words, congress always has clung to the idea of having the postal service do its job just as cheaply (for the people) as it can and that it is better for it to fall just a little short of its expenses than to take from those who use that service more than is needed. If there is a deficit at the end of the year, as there nearly always has been, congress has been willing to take care of it with an appropriation from funds received by general taxation.

But in the last several years when the volume of letters fell off as it always does when there is not much business, the amount of the deficit grew to a size which congress decided was a little too large. So it turned to the increase in the postage rates on letters to make up part of the loss. That one-cent increase probably will not be enough to offset the anticipated deficit completely, but it will reduce the difference between the income and the expenses to a comparatively small sum. If there had been no rate increase, I am told that the deficit from last July to the end of next June would have approached $200,000,000.

And that brings another thought.

As a people, Americans have always stood against the government taxing industry to pay the cost of engaging in business. Of course, there are exceptions, yet that has been our general conception. We have always said as a people that government was not created for any other purpose than to govern. It was not a business institution as we know business. Yet, there are not many greater businesses than the postal service, and it is not an agency that governs our conduct or our relations with our neighbors except indirectly. Why, then, should not private capital and private industry perform the service and enjoy the profits therefrom?

The answer is simple. The reason is that those who conceived our form of government and envisioned the magnitude of our nation, at the same time, saw the necessity for a uniform system of handling its written communications.

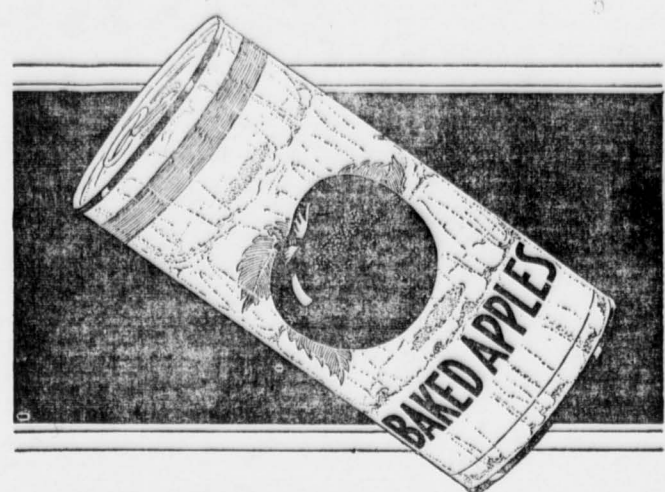

Those men recognized more than a century and a half ago that the individual states must not be allowed to control the means of communication; that when a letter was once started on its way, it must go on, and that only one agency could be made responsible if success were to be attained.

The post master general occupies the post of head of the post office department. Embodied in it are dozens of supervisory agencies, filled for the most part by men and women who have moved up through the ranks of workers who gained appointment in the service only after meeting civil service tests. They were promoted on merit.

What I have said relative to the machinery of the postal service does not apply, however, to several thousand post masters who gain jobs by appointment from the President, not after an examination of their qualifications but after they have qualified with the politicians. Fortunately for patrons of the mails, however, the machine runs on without squeaks because it was organized on a sound basis, as we later shall see.

An Apple a Day

An apple a day may not always keep the doctor away, but here is a way to try the old saying out most inexpensively. Did you know that you can now get baked apples in cans all ready to serve, hot or cold? If you serve them hot, you save some fuel and sugar, for they don't take long to heat, and they require no further sweetening. If you serve them cold, you save all the cooking and the sugar.

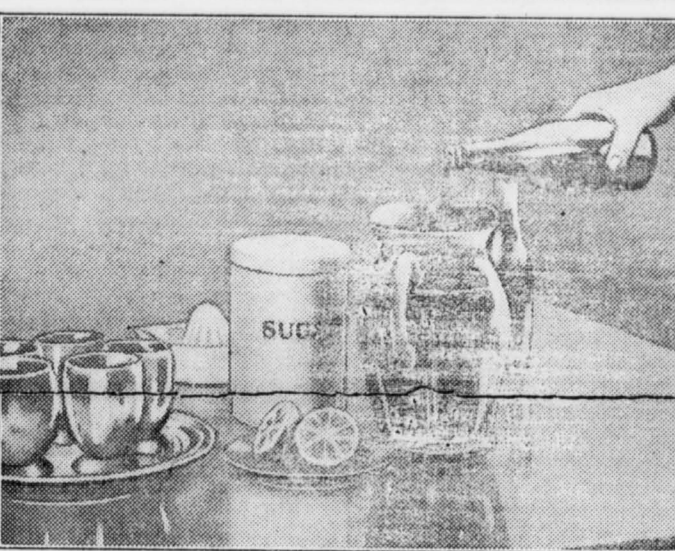

But that's not the only advantage of these canned baked apples. They are made of selected fruit, so you can be sure that each one is a fine apple. There are four in each can, and each apple is wrapped in a separate paper container. The can opens with a key soldered to its top, and the apples slide out whole.

Every housewife has baked apples, of course. It's a fairly simple task, but we wonder if housewives ever stop to add the cost of the fuel and sugar to the cost of the apples, and then on top of that calculate the time it takes them to bake them.

Save Time and Work

The canned apples are not only great time savers, but they will also save a great deal of perspiration during the coming hot days when you like to light the oven as infrequently as possible. Thus the canned food industry has added another of nature's good foods in a form which almost everyone likes to its constantly growing list of cooking conveniences.

Summer Calls for Iced Drinks

By Jane Rogers

ICED fruit beverages are inseparably linked with the summer months. And rightly so. In addition to their refreshing qualities they provide the increased amount of liquid the system requires during hot weather. The fruit juices furnish invaluable vitamins and mineral salts. The sugar is a quick source of the new energy we need to banish that mid-afternoon tired feeling that overtakes most of us during the dog days.

Your family and guests will all enjoy—

Grape Juice Nectar
Mix together one cup orange juice, one cup lemon juice, one quart grape juice, one pint pineapple juice. Add two cups of sugar and stir thoroughly. Add one bottle of maraschino cherries, chopped. A few minutes before serving pour in two quarts changed water and add sufficient ice to chill.

Frosty Mint

Crush one bunch fresh mint. Combine juice with the juice of five lemons. Add one-half cup water, boiling hot, and one and a half cups sugar. Let stand one-half hour. Just before serving add three bottles of ginger ale. Serve with an ice cube, a maraschino cherry and a slice of lemon in each glass.

More Light Needed On Who Gets Dollar That Goes to Market

Sugar Statistics Show U.S. Takes Biggest Share; Refiner Smallest

THE housewife takes her dollar to the market and in return receives a selection of fresh vegetables, of canned goods or of such staples as sugar, butter, flour and so on down the line.

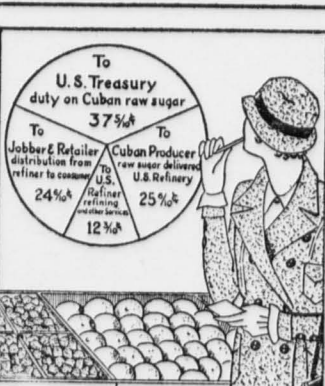

If prices seem too high, and most times they do to the woman who is trying to make one dollar cover the ground formerly covered by two, she is prone to criticize the people who provide the food the grocer or the butcher sell her.

"Why," she asks, "must I pay this price when I read in the newspapers that producers are receiving a mere pittance for their products. The canners and packers and refiners must be getting rich on the difference."

A real story lies behind what happens to that "difference" and the housewife who takes time to study the true conditions will be much better equipped to spend intelligently and buy wisely.

An interesting example was brought to light recently when statistics on the cost of sugar refining were made public in connection with the suit brought by the Government against the Sugar Institute. For the first time it was revealed what happens to the dollar when it goes to market and buys sugar refined from Cuban raw sugar.

Based on a retail price of 5.7 cents per pound, as computed by the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics, the dollar purchased for the housewife, a total of 17.54 pounds of refined sugar. But the refiner, to produce that much sugar has to buy from the grower 18.77 pounds of raw sugar. Out of the housewife's dollar the refiner received only 12.3 cents; less than one-third the amount that went to the U. S. Treasury as payment of duty on the raw sugar required to produce the refined. For that 12.3 cents the refiner furnished labor, plant, machinery, fuel and supplies, for refining and packaging the sugar including the packages themselves. He absorbed the expense of storing the refined sugar in warehouses until it was called for by the sugar brokers whose commissions he also paid. In fact the refiner financed practically the entire operation from the time the raw sugar was shipped from Cuba until the refined sugar was delivered to the customer.

The wonder is that sugar can reach the grocer's shelves at its present low price.

The same type of story might be told about canned foods, meats and many other products. It should be told for the modern woman with her acute business sense is entitled to a full understanding where her food dollars go.

There are rumors of election irregularities and contests. In Carter county the defeated candidate for sheriff on the first count wouldn't stand for it. The election board gave him a recount and declared him the winner on the second count.

In the calamity that laid low the large crop of Kentucky candidates recently, L. T. Hovernale of Irvine, won easily the Democratic nomination for representative in the Estill-Jackson district. Mr. Hovernale says he has to overcome only a Republican majority of about 2000 to win in the fall election, and that should be easy.

Our Government —How It Operates

By William Bruckart

DEPARTMENT OF INTERIOR

UNDER our system of government, predicated on alignment of the citizens into two major political parties, changes are effected very slowly in the matter of expanding, or accomplishing a shrinkage, in any establishment or its functions. Some politician rises up and makes "an issue" of every proposal of that kind, and quite obviously he has his following. Thus, oftentimes functions of government go on long after their necessity has ceased.

But I am going to discuss changes that have come about whether the political parties desired or not, changes that were accomplished in a manner comparable in reverse to the history of the memorable character, Topsy, who "just grewed." They are centered in the Department of the Interior, and I say without fear of contradiction that no department of the government has experienced such changes with respect to importance of its several units.

It was not so many years ago, less than half a century, that the country looked to the Department of the Interior in connection with the grave Indian problem; it looked to the same agency concerning disposition of the vast public lands, and the same agency was in charge of all veterans' pensions, though the number was small as compared to now.

In the meantime, the West was developing. Public lands were being absorbed and the number of Indians was decreasing and the blood was being diffused. Far-seeing statesmen recognized that conservation of the beauty spots required early action, and preservation of them as national parks got under way.

The course of the times carried with it the constituent elements of new problems, such as administration of irrigation projects, as the arid states received the overflow of population. Reclamation of lands was the premise from which the movement had to proceed.

Thus, the Department of the Interior saw its influence wane in some sections of the country and on some matters of national import, and obdurate it expanding in others. The public domain has declined in size and importance until the general land office is only a fraction of its former self, though still an office of consequence, and the office of commissioner of Indian affairs, once among the powerful offices of the government, has declined in importance correspondingly with the shrinkage of Indian population and problems.

Through the years, of course, the department has received additions, such as the office of education, and the national park service has been built up as the nation sought to conserve for the future the beauty spots and recreational grounds naturally presented in virgin form. The development of the great resources of Alaska to a large extent is under the direction of the secretary of the interior who has the Alaska railroad under his administration. There is also the geological survey, an agency for study of the nation's geologic map.

As to the changes that have come in the department since its inception, however, none stand out more than does the expansion of influence through construction and management of irrigation projects. Actually, none have more importantly on the economic and physical well-being of what was the West of yore. The director of reclamation has been exerting this influence of the federal government for 30 years, and if one may use the constant calls for additional legislation as a criterion, the limit of power and influence of that office is yet far off. Irrigation is only in its infancy.

As the work in connection with educating the Indians and providing for their future welfare and protection of their funds grows less, and as the area of the public domain declines, the functions of government decline there, but in another part of the great building that houses the department the functions of government are expanding that the national parks may be protected and preserved for future generations. And so it is, too, with the commissioner of education who is the liaison between the state school systems and the federal government, as well as serving in co-operation with all educational institutions throughout the country.

Wake Up Your Liver Bile —Without Calomel

And You'll Jump Out of Bed in the Morning Rarin' to Go

If this bile is not flowing freely, your food doesn't digest. It just decays in the bowels. Gas bloats up your stomach. You have a thick, bad taste and your breath is foul, skin often breaks out in blemishes. Your head aches and you feel down and out. Your whole system is poisoned.

It takes those good old CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS to get those two pounds of bile flowing freely and make you feel "up and up." They contain wonderful, harmless, gentle vegetable extracts, amazing when it comes to making the bile flow freely.

But don't ask for liver pills. Ask for Carter's Little Liver Pills. Look for the name Carter's Little Liver Pills on the red label. Lowest substitute, 25c at all stores. © 1931, C. M. Co.
